Birkbeck College, London, faces a fight for survival after the announcement by the University Grants Committee last week on how funds are to be allocated.

Birkbeck, a college of London University, is confronted with a cut of 30 per cent in its grant because the committee has changed the way in which it calculates funding.

For financing purposes, the UGC has decided to value part-time students at half the rate of those who are full-time. But Birkbeck's 3,000 students are all part-time. The college had been funded at a level of 0.8 of the rate for a full-time student for undergraduates. Funding for postgraduates was at the same rate as for other colleges.

Professor Roderick Floud, head of the history depart-ment and chairman of the research committee, said We cannot see how we could survive and provide the range of courses we do with such a severe cut.

Hailsham stand on legal fees attacked

HOME NEWS

By Frances Gibb Legal Affairs Correspondent

Relations between the Bar and the the Government over the issue of legal aid fees deteriorated yesterday after Lord Hailsham of St Marylebone, the Lord Chancellor, rejected claims by judges and other peers in the Lords on Wednesday that current fees were too low.

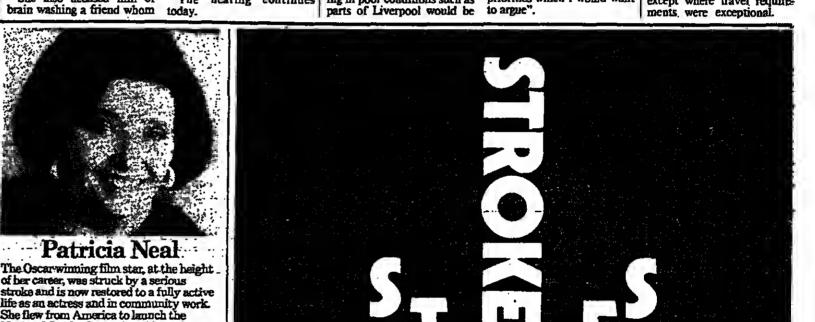

Mr Robert Alexander OC said: "We had peer after peer with the greatest experience unanimous in saying that the rate of pay was too low. The Lord Chancellor is still wholly unprepared to accept that, even allowing for the fact that he is involved in current negotiations."

The same pay talks, between the Bar and the Attorney General over fees for barristers working for the new crown prosecution service, have run into trouble with the Bar elaiming that the Government is trying to get barristers "on the cheap".

Mr Alexander said yesterday that the Attorney General had been offered £60 gross for a half-day and £85 for a whole day for work in the magistrates' courts. At the same time, solicitors had been offered "up to £250 for a full day" "We recognize that our pay should be lower than that for solicitors who have far higher overheads. But what the Government seems to be saying is that while barristers with some experience ought to do this work, if they won't do it for the money, it will use less experienced barristers." The Attorney General had made clear in a letter to the Bar, which wants fees of £70 for a half-day and £120 for a whole day, that the proposed fees would be the norm, except where travel require-

IT'S TREATABLE

The right treatment in the right place at the right time can greatly improve the quality of life for stroke sufferers. Money is urgently needed for research into the prevention and treatment of stroke, for the establishment of specialist units for the rehabilitation of stroke patients and for the rapid expansion of CHSA's Volunteer Stroke Scheme and the national network of Stroke Clubs. Just about everyone knows somebody who has had a stroke or someone who is disabled from a stroke.

PM in clash over 'heaven on earth' or living hell

POLICIES

Airs Thatcher, the Prime Minister, was challenged during Commons questions on her comment yesterday to the Conservative women's con-terence that home-owning Britain was "a little bit of heaven on earth" compared to Russia.

There were loud Conservative protests when Mr Neil Klanock. Leader of the Opposition. said she was wrong to have used and distorted those words of a gourageous woman. Mrs Yelena Bonner (wife of the Soviet oissident), for a partisan purpose. Mrs Thatcher said Britain was much better off under the Conservatives than it was under Labour, who liked high taxation and liked taking money out of people's pockets.

The subject was raised by Mr Dennis Canavan (Falkirk West, Lab) who said: When the Prime Minister got carried away yes-terday by her own rhetoric, did she forget that in Britain today there are over four million people unemployed, over seven million people living on the official poverty level, over 1.5 million people waiting for a house and over 750.000 people waiting to get into hospital?

Will the Prime Minister re-turn to the real world and realize that instead of heaven and hell in Britain today the reality of Thatcherism means a living hell? (Labour cheers)

Mrs Thatcher: The phrase "Heaven on earth" came from Mrs Yclena Bonner when she was contrasting life io a free society, which is heaved on earth to life in a socialist society such as Russia from which she canie. Heaven on carth she found as being owning her own home and being able to get the operations in the West she could flot get in her own country.

Tutu throws down the gauntlet over ban on Soweto meetings

From Michael Hornshy, Johanneshurg

South Africa faces the pros-pect of mounting violence and growing pressure on the rand in the wake of government moves to ban all meetings and demonstrations linked to the tenth anniversary on June 16 of the outbreak of the Soweto uprising. Bishop Desmond Tutu, the Anglican Bishop of Johannesburg, threw down a gauntlet to the Government yesterday, saying he would instruct his clergy to proceed with the holding of commemorative services on June 16, and that he bimself would take part.

Under a notice issued on Wednesday by the Minister of Law and Order. Mr Louis Le Grange, all meetings "in any building wheresoever in the Republic" convened to commemorate the riots of 1976 are banned until the end of the month.

Outdoor gatherings of a political character are already prohibited. Wednesday's ban also covers any meeting held to commemorate the adoption on June 26 1955 of the Freedom Charter, which became the manifesto of the outlawed African National Congress.

The charter is also subscribed to by the still-legal United Democratic Front, a loose alliance of more than 600 anti-apartheid organizations.

The UDF and other groups had planned rallies on and around June 16 and June 26. They were still digesting the and television coverage of sion betwee implications of Mr Le unrest of the kind which were Swaziland.

Four years ago an EEC opinion poll found that 38 per, cent of those asked thought an explosion at a nuclear power plant was not very likely and only 10 per cent thought it very likely. At a meeting of social affairs ministers in Luxembourg, Mr Clarke launched a new plan for tackling long-term unemployment and encouraging enterprise. The action programme - formulated by Britain, Ireland and Italy focuses on aid to the selfemployed and small and medium-sized businesses, and the dismantling of legal and administrative obstacles to initiative and growth.

Mr Clarke said be was delighted to be able to announce a new EEC directive on greater equality between men and women in pension and sick pay schemes.

The ministers also called on member states to give the handicapped a fairer chance in ioh application and training. Britain takes over the presidency of the Council of Ministers from The Netherlands on July 1, and Brinsb ministers are already indicating that the Government wants action programmes rather than talk while Britain is in the chair. Mr Clarke emerged from a long discussion on the prob-lems of farmers' wives clearly impatient with the endless wrangles among the Twelve. The problem is the agenda we have inherited from the past," he said. "We should be tackling the important issue we all face: unemployment and job creation." Ministers spent too much

Mr Mosar's solution is a mix of alternative renewable energy sources, traditional resources, such as coal and oil, and "safe" nuclear installations.

THE TIMES FRIDAY JUNE 6 1986 SPECTRUM

Royal work in the inner cities

Next Friday the Prince of Wales will present the Times/RIBA community enterprise scheme awards. The Prince has taken a sometimes controversial interest in community needs, but behind the headlines Charles Knevitt finds achievement has become popular tospeculate about how the Prince of Wales should occu-py his time. The Governor-ship of Hong Kong was among the recent kites being flown; although whether this was meant to be an honour for the colony or a form of temporary exile for the Prince is nuclear.

Contrary to the impression sometimes given by these and other fanciful notions, there is a more serious side to the Prince; an interest and concern to which be is devoting an increasing proportion of his time. It is a range of activities focused on helping the young, the disadvantaged, the unemployed, small businesses and community groups to encourage them to seize initiatives, help others and help themselves. Shocked by the inner city riots in 1981, he also took up the cause of community architecture as offering one way to encourage those living in areas of multiple deprivation, and who feel alienated and intimi-dated by their surroundings, to do wide public notice, however, his remarks were over-shadowed bywhat he had to say about the proposed National Gallery extension ("a monstrous carbuncle") and the Mansion House Square office block ("a giant glass stump"). "Carbuncles, I'm afraid, make hetter headlines than communities", Prince Charles-lamented lamented.

"He finds the media's attention to the more frivolous aspects of his life hurtful and disappointing". says Harold Haywood, director of the Royal Jubilee Trusts and The Prince's Trust, of which Prince Charles is president. "Suggestions that he should be found a 'proper' -joh are unfair and ignorant", projects. "He thinks people are far too narrow-minded in their ap-proach. He wants to see innovation". says Stephen O'Brien, director of Business in the Community. The Prince became president of BIC last year for a five-year term. "He wants to make a practical contributioo and does not take 'it can't be done' for an answer".

Next week the Prince will be chairing a quarterly board meeting of BIC when it will take a decision to establish between six and eight local development partnerships to help coordinate initiatives and bring in outside resources. He has either visited, or has made plans to visit15 events this year, meeting enterprise agencies, opening Project Full-Employ training cen-tres and regional exhibitions in places as diverse as Brixton, Car-lisle and Skelmersdale.

ne of the favourite expressions of those involved in community projects is the "bottomup" approach, which contrasts with the "top-down" stance of central and local government, and other bureaucracies. "You could say that the Prince is a top-down person married to a bottom-np approach", says O'Brien. "He has the ability to work at two levels: he has a deep concern for people, especially the poor, but he also picks up ideas of what needs to be done, spots gaps and then does something to fill

Rod Hackney, the architect at the centre of the "divided Britain" controversy last year and one of the Prince's advisers, says: "He is very perceptive and has an uncanny foresight at times. He can discern the wasters and sycophants a mile off from those who are truly committed to ideas he wants to support. He is loyal to those who are loyal to him. He has an extraordinary rapport with the people he meets on his visits to community architecture proejcts. Those who want to rubbish his ideas get caught in a piocer movement

To the consternation of some, the Prince's support for community architecture - and for Rod Hackney - has survived the recent trauma. He has seen several of the entries for the Community Enter-DTISC AV ards he will be presenting at the RIBA next week, when he is expected to make another important speech on the subject. Hackney says: "He likes making waves by throwing a rock into the pool and seeing the result. Many thought that his Hampton Court speech was the last, as well as the first, word he would have to say on architecture. Now the pool has filled up again and perhaps it's time for another splash".

More than a decade after it oded. Vietnam has becom in the last few years, the most written-about war in American history; up to four books a week are still published. Now the first international conference to study the effects of Vietnam on American culture is to be held in Manchester in September. More than 80 speakers, mainly American combat veterans and academics but also representatives from Austra-lia, Germany, Spain and the UK, will present papers covering a variety of Vietnamrelated issues, from the bizarre - how the conflict was covered in Hot Rod magazines - to the thinking of official military historians. The conference will discuss media coverage and how the war affected television reporting. It will look at Hollywood's approach and how it has since tried to rewrite history by turning a defeat into a kind of victory through films of the Rambo genre. The problem of the veterans returning home and seeking to readjust to life will also be studied.

"I thought I was in love", admits Laurie, a warm, good-looking man, now in his 40s. "With hindsight, I can see that I was deluding myself. My upbringing had been so emo-tionally sheltered and my mother's death was an appalling shock to де.". Even so, when Carol arranged to meet him after work one day, and told him that she was leaving him, it came like a bombshell. He had an idea that she was even unhappy. "It was a tremendous shock - just like my mother's death all over again. She (Carol) explained that she felt unfulfilled, and that there was nowhere for the marriage to go, but that didn't make sense to me at the time. It seemed so pie in the sky, so unrealistic and romantic."

At a time when one marriage in three ends in divorce, it is rare to hear the man's side of the story. Women find it naturally easier to express their emotions - both privately and in public - and it is therefore their views which are normally ared on the subject. Yet divorce affects men every bit as profoundly as women, and the very fact that they are less able to articulate their deepest feelings means that it is harder for them to come to terms emotionally with what has happened."

These are the discoveries of writer Denise Winn, whose book, Men On Divorce, is published next week. In Laurie realizes that it, she chronicles the experiences of a randomly selected cross-section of start. riage goes wrong, men often have to flounder alone in emotional turmoil because they do not have the same support network of friends, male or female, that women traditionally have", says Winn, a former editor of Psychology Today.

"Men usually claim that they find it easier to talk to a woman than to another man. Women are often more ready to listen, and to understand."

Yet, the factor which stands out most poignantly throughout her book is the similarity between the

Interestingly, none of the men interviewed by Winn used the opportuoity to criticize their former partner or show themselves in a partner of snow inclusives in a falsely favourable light. While poor communication was mentioned by most of the men as a major contributory factor leading to the breakdown of their marriage,

Winn was intrigued to discover that their inability to understand or communicate their feeliogs was so often attributed to upbringing. "For many men, these were some of the says.

And while affairs frequently precipitated break-ups, Winn found them to be symptoms rather than causes of the marriage breakdown, althnugh, in each case, they sig-nalled "crunch point" for one or other of the partners.

One man, who smashed up the furniture after discovering that his wife was having an affair, admits: "Looking back, the most useless thing I did was to get so emotionally hysterical for so linng. I'd advise anyone in this situation to try to get the emotions out and then over and dane with."

Winn found that quite a few men were aware of feeling relief when their wives admitted to affairs "because they already wanted to get

Pete. married to an outrageous' fint. had failed to recognize his own need to feel wanted and believed that his hurt and resentment over his wife's behaviour meant that he was weak and unmanly. When he met a girl who actually listened tohim he was enchanted.

Several of the men found that professional counselling helped them to adjust to and understand the failure of their marriages. Devoid of the intimate friendships frequently enjoyed by women, their need for an outside source who would listen and even allow them the relief of a good cry for the first time was, in some cases, desperate, Often the reaction of family and friends was to criticize or condemin the wife - frequently driving the man to defend her - rather than offering him sympathy and support. Aod for those with children, the hardest part was coming to terms with what was best for them. The conclusion of the divorced fathers is that telling the children the truth at the time of the break-up is of vital importance. Several of the men felt that their failure to establish an atmosphere of openness and trust at the outset made it difficult for their children to talk about their worries and insecurities when they saw them in later years.

Yet, despite the long-term and drastic effects of divorce on men. most remarry and, generally, more quickly than women in the same situation. Winn suggests that this may be due to the fact that "the emotional burden of being exiled from the family is heavier than the financial burden of divorce". According to the National Marriage Guidance Council, second marlages are much more likely to work if both partners have come to terms with the failure of the first, and have been able to learn positively from them, so as not to repeat the same mistakes

Even in marriages without chil-dren, the emotional impact of a divorce can be traumatic and coming out of it with self-respect was seen, in retrospect, as being of paramount importance - even by those who felt that things had out turned out as they had wished. And all too often, an already highly delicate situation is made worse by the lawyers. One man. whose marriage had ended when he started an affair, wanted to do the best by his wife and son, and told his solicitor: "Let's split it all half and half."

"if you do that, she'll want more", said the solicitor. "She is not that kind of person".

argued the man. "She will be," replied the solicitor. "And even if she isn't, her. solicitor is."

Yesterday the paradox was most graphically set out by the contrast between the scenes outside and inside the RAH. While Nigel Lawson tinkers tim-idly with the British tax system such as the recent penny in the pound cut in the basic tax rate the US is on the verge of cutting the top tax rate from 50 to 27 per cent. American multimillionaires will soon be taxed at lower rates than low-paid workers in Britain. The top US tax rate, which stood at 70 per cent in January 1981, was cut to 50 per ceot later that year. Now the Senate tax committee has unanimously voted in favour of a bill that cuts the 10p rate to 27 per cent and leaves the great majority of tax-payers paying only 15 per cent. It is a tremendous political victory for supply-side economics.

Lower tax rates. moreover, signify that popular democracy io the US is now sufficiently mature to set aside envy and to focus on opportunity as the galvanizing force in politics. American legislators of all parties no longer believe that high rates are necessary. This is a vast change since 1978 when the Carter administration wanted to raise taxes by closing loopholes while maintaining high rates. Supply-side policy triumphed because it disproved the depress-ing Keynesian analysis that the economy could not grow without rising inflation. which in turn could not be subdued without higher unemployment. Since 1982 the US economy has created 10 million new jobs while inflation and interest rates have fallen. This "impossible" result has convinced politicians that incentives matter. In contrast, Mrs Thatcher's higher-rated taxpayers earning and declaring more income. The government has done the opshifted upwards from poor to rich. posite. Initially it reduced the top rate on earned income from 83 per Lower bracket taxpayers did not respond so well, but studies show cent to 60 per cent. (The surcharge on investment income, now abolished, meant that top taxpayers faced 98 per cent tax). But since then budgetary concerns about the deficit seem to have forestalled any further significant cut. Her reward has been 13 per cent ucemployment. It would be hard to believe that Mrs Thatcher's 1979 reduction to 60 per cent cost the Treasury any revenue. American experience, demonstrated by Internal Revenue statistics, makes it clear that the reduction in the top rate from 70 to 50 resulted in more revenue being collected from top hracket taxpayers - both in absolute terms and as a proportion of total tax collections. This resulted from that on average about half the revenue lost by cutting the rates was recovered – substantially more than the US Treasury had estimated in 1981. So the US evidence suggests that by con-centrating on reductions in the basic rate, the British government is maximizing the loss of revenue and gaining a minimum improve-ment in incentives. It seems an overly cautious approach to 13 per cent unemployment. Some critics claim that the Reagan miracle was possible only because foreigners were willing to finance the US trade and hudget deficits. Not so. The capital account deficit was due not to a rise in foreign capital inflows but burden was consequently

to a sharp fall in US capital outflows as overexposed US banks redoced their lending to the Third World. The diminished supply of the dollar in foreign exchange markets produced a sharp rise in its exchange value, which in turn caused a trade deficit.

Similarly, the budget deficit was the product of unexpected disinflation. Reagan administration forecasts overestimated the iofla-tion rate by a wide margin, with the result that nominal gross ational product and tax revenues fell far short of projections. Since government spending based on the bigh projections did not fall (but actually rose), the hudget deficit grew. How, then, did the US government finance large budget deficits without pushing up interest rates or resorting to inflationary money creation? The answer is that the same disinflation that produced the deficit also caused a change in investment behaviour that fi-nanced the deficit. Falling inflation made bigh-yielding Treasury bonds desirable investments. Investors duly bid up the price of bonds, thus pushing down inferest

The ILO's determination is not in question. But it is hard not to wonder how this Utopianism is going to translate into practice. Jack Martin, chief of the employment division, says the ILO is different "because we do have a tradition of working with local people. And the essence is that we are not pouring in money, we are helping people to pool their own resources for things they want to do. They have more at stake than we do and sort out their difficulties as they occur." two partners. But in the end these are side issues. The problem actually resides in the policy itself. Where nuclear weapons policy is con-cerned, a chasm exists in the Liberal/SDP Alliance, as it does in the constry as a whole. Since the Gaiskellite controversy 25 ago, the rational balance of the argument has not changed very much. All that has happened is that on the one side the need for an indepen-dent British deterrent has been strengthened by growing doubts about the reliability of the American nuclear umbrella; on the other side the cost of this insurance premium in relation to other objectives has greatly increased. In my view these new considerations more or less cancel each other out and leave us where we were: namely still in need of a minimum deterrent of our own. The trouble is that for reasons which I discussed here three weeks ago public opinion is less sure that it wishes to pay the price. And many. Alliance politicians, who share these preoccupations as well as being sensitive to their presence in others, are not so sure either. The Labour Party, through

The question of whether this is a good exchange still has to be tested. The opinion polls, as I have suggested, show some movement towards a left-wing defence position but not enough to pro-vide cover for all Labour's the crucial question of Britain's nuclear status to be decided in the unilaterist policies. In other light of circumstances after the words, Labour's appearance of next election. Their motives for unity may have been purchased at adopting this line have been either that they are terrified of the effect of disunity on the Alliance's an uneconomic price.

Would the Alliance be wise to pay a price of its own for unanimity? Those who are in favour of temporising argue, naturally enough, that the comm-ission's fudged agreement would be far less costly than Labour's much more extreme position, and certainly much cheaper than a situation in which the two halves of the Alliance have different defence policies. But this leaves out of account not only the real conviction of many potential SDP voters that there must be no compromising Britain's deterrent but also the horrid vulnerability of the commission's formula. The fatal question is "How can the Alliance possibly claim that it knows enough about the national interest to cancel Trident but not enough to be able to decide whether to remain a nuclear power?" Whatever the Alliance does on this issue will be jam for its opponents, but an agreement to Proposals for a world revolution drawn up by Francis Blanchard, the veteran director general of the UN's International Labour Office, were presented to its annual general conference here yesterday. His message, to an audience of bureaucrats, representatives of employer organizations and trade unionists, was that they represent only a minority: those in organized work.

The ILO, his report said, must reaches out beyond the factories and plantations to the vast army "potential workers" for whom the dole queue, social security and regular hours are unohtainable luxuries - 1,200 million of them, two out of five of the world's labour force.

For any constituent body of the United Nations, which is hardly celebrated for its adaptability to changing circumstances or its passion for relevance, this would be dramatic enough. But Blanchard's challenge is more radical still, Trade union leaders everywhere, troubled by falling membership due to recession and changing patterns of work, would welcome expenditure of public money on schemes which would swell their ranks. But that is not the idea. "Integrating these workers into the formal sector", says Blanchard in his report", "might be neither feasible nor realistic": his goal is to encourage the "informal" world of street vendors, repair shops, hoe makers and

Blanchard argues that it is time to recognize that the light against unemployment and poverty is being lost. "We have", he says, "been quite successful - some people would say too successful - in promoting workers' rights. But what about those poor devils beyond all the laws we can devise?" To shift the venerable ILO into this new gear, Blanchard needs the agreement, if not encouragement, of its tripartite membership of fish dryers "to organize better the

This may seem self-evident when, even in the West, the move to small enterprises, part-time work or self-employment, with all the attendant uncertainties, is already an established trend. But the ILO lives in a different world. from which it is going to have to emerge if it is to help those millions of unemployed and underemployed. The main task of the ILO's annual conference at present is to adopt international conventions on workers' rights, social security, working conditions and industrial bealth hazards. After Chernobyl, nobody would dismiss that work as unimportant and this year's issue, asbestosis, is overdue for solution. It was to protect workers' rights and improve life in mills, mines and factories that the ILO was founded in 1919. But with 150 conventions on the books, and many others honoured more in the breach than the observance,

The recent South African attacks on African National Congress bases in three neighbouring countries are widely seen as a government sop to the increasingly strident Afrikaner right wing, even at the risk of scuppering the Commonwealth "eminent persons group" and so inviting economic sanctions.

Interviews with cahinet ministers and senior military officers do not bear out this interpretation. Fear of the right wing is not a dominant sentiment; the threat posed by Eugene TerreBlanche has been hlown up out of all proportion by the government itself and the western media. Far more worrying to Pretoria is the continuing turmoil and political vacuum in the townships, which it believes is due in part to exag-gerated estimates of ANC power.

The ANC claims not only that it has made many of the townships ungovernable but has also developed the capacity to plant bombs and landmines anywhere in South Africa. It is confident of its ability to raise the armed struggle to new levels of violence and force Pretoria to sue for peace. It is an approach which breaks all the ILO moulds. For most governments, this is political dynamite. It is one thing for the workers to defend themselves against employers - and even that is harshly discouraged in many countries - but Blanchard and his team are talking about promoting grassroots movements of the poor to challenge district and urban anthorities, landowners, wholesalers and middle men; moneylenders: the whole tissue of privilege and hierarchy.

This has strengthened the Nationalist belief that by legalizing the ANC the government could eventually split it.

Increasingly the inner circle refers to the success of its policy in Namibia as a model to be emulated. There the main black nationalist movement, the South West African People's Org-anization, has never been banned; in the government's view Swapo's external wing has been all but crushed as a military force while, internally, the basis for a political compromise is now considered to be much wider precisely because some Swapo members have returned and iovolved themselves in the political process. # FAITH AND MIRACLES

Minster two years ago briefly brought the whole world's attention to a blazing row in the Church of England. For the Bishop of Durham, the RL Rev. David Jenkins, had been consecrated in that same Minster two days before the fire, and he had questioned the Virgin Birth and Resurrection in a television interview. It was not difficult for the world's press to fancy that the mysterious lightning strike which set the roof burning was the Almighty getting His own back. It was everybody's favourite topic of conversation for days. -

The roof is now largely rebuilt; but the Church of England has yet to rebuild its own unity after the furore the bishop's opinions caused. He had rather artlessly brought into the public domain a sideissue in a long-running argument among academic theologians about the relationship between doctrine and history. All over the country ordinary church-goers of unsophisticated faith were outraged.

It is a cliché in such circles that theologians spend much of their time trying to answer the questions which no-one is asking. But the bishop had dared to answer a real question which exactly caught the contemporary mood of semi-Christian agnosticism and religious uncertainty in the secular world: did the two key miracles at the centre of the Christian faith, the Virgin Birth and the Resurrection, really happen? Or to put the question in its sharpest form, where odium theologicum rises to its maximum; did Jesus really have no human father; and was the tomb empty? It was and is the Bishop of Durham's sincere belief that Christianity not only does not need those two miracles, but is all the better without them, since it would then be more attractive to the modern sceptical mind. He has never the states of considering and

The blazing roof of York them on the grounds that God did not work that way

In the press, in Parliament, and subsequently in the Gen-eral Synod of the Church of England, the bishop's views were roasted. It was demanded that the whole House of Bishops should meet to consider his case, and declare where it stood. It met, again and again, and after much debating, redrafting, and delay produced yesterday's official reply: a unanimous "Yes and No", Some bishops believe the tomb was empty and some do not; some think Jesus was Joseph's natural son and some that Mary's pregnancy was miraculous. Their statement gave no figures of bow the balance lay, though it is not difficult to work out that Durham was in a minority.

This plainly will not be enough to put out the fire. Next month the General Synod returns to York to spend a whole Sunday debating the bishops' position (or positions), and pass its own judgement. Those who wanted an unequivocal repudiation of the Durham doubts will express their indignation that the church's "purple trade union" has closed ranks to protect him. It would be a mis-. judgement on their part to press their case much harder, however. They have gained a sort of victory; and there is room for compromise. Those who agree with the Bishop of Durham, on the other hand, will find the cover the bishops have given him a little too thin for their comfort. In the long-term struggle between doctrinal liberals and doctrinal conservatives, there is no mistaking the serious defeat the liberals have suffered at the bishops' collective hands. The official response in detail is far from sympathetic to him; it reads rather like a judge's summing up for a conviction, ending oddly with a direction to the jury to acquit.

The bishops' meetings were actually said he did not believe ... secret, but a key role in shaping ... them, just that he doubted the outcome was undoubtedly on most fronts.--

THE MAKING OF THE PRESIDENCY

The Anglo-Irish-Italian cam. If there were any lingering path. Mr Laws n's promise to paign, announced this week, to doubts, they must have been the National Economic played by the Bishop of Salisbury, Dr. John Baker, chairman of the church's Doctrine Commission and therefore the church's official expert on such matters. An argument that apparently appeals to him is that if Christ's tomb was not empty after the Resurrection, those disciples who said it was must have been lying. The this young woman being given the chance to cuddle her stillborn accounts in the Gospels are too detailed to be explained as symbolic myths; and stories that the body had been stolen blundered, and the feelings of responsibility and failure will bear heavily on everyone involved. are specifically denied by the Apostles. Salisbury evidently won that part of the argument handsomely: the point about lying is spelled out in the clock back. Until 1968 medical statement. The exercise has established one thing clearly: that belief in miracles, at least where they are central to the faith, is thoroughly intellectually respectable in the church and, room for disagreement notwithstanding, still holds the high ground. Even the bishops themselves are probably a bit surprised at this. In the current sceptical climate they have trial by jury: tended to be a little coy about admitting to views which some of the most fashionable theologians have been mocking for a generation. But with a much more conservative; style of doctrine coming from the Vatican under the present Pope, and now from the Anglican bishops too, liberal theology is definitely in retreat

From Mrs Carolyn Dealey Sir, I read, with increasing distress, your report (May 31) whereby a father hlamed his daughter's suicide on her being given her stillborn baby to hold. I, too, had a stillborn baby last year. My daughter was washed, dressed, photographed and given to me to hold. She was later baptised by a local clergyman who also conducted her funeral service. Stillbirth is a devastating experiof UGC ratings From Professor Peter Robson Sir. As a member of a substanoally nnder funded department nevertheless placed amongst the top 10 in the subject for teaching by a recently cited survey in the The Times Higher Education Supple-ment, I would like to be able to disagree with the thesis of the Martin of Dewine in his later. Master of Downing in his letter (May 39) but I cannol. At the same ume. I feel that it is a pity that he should have confined his critical comments to leaching (his italics). This might lead some readers to suppose that it can be concluded that recent UGC grant adjust-ments are based on a proper review of university research. There must be grave doubts as to whether there has yet been a proper review of either university eaching or university research. Certain big spenders have no doubt been looked at closely. As for the bulk of subjects in the humanities and the social sciences which do not normally fall into that category, the extremely crude methods laid down by the UGC for the preparation and submission of research profiles (list five representative publications!) and the absence of any requirement or opportunity to submit comprehensive statements of the scale of research effort, must surely have resulted in the provision of a seriously defective database.

Moreover, there is nothing to suggest that the UGC has attempted to standardise submissions even crudely or to use any of the indicators of significance that educational research has suggested (such as citations) in order to provide a less subjective and more systematic basis for its immensely difficult and important task.

In combination these limitations must make even those who sympathise with the objectives wonder whether any of this exercise in casual empiricism deserves to be given much weight for the purpose of grant distribution or making judgements on the scale and quality of research effort. Yours faithfully, PETER ROBSON. University of St Andrews, Department of Economics, St Salvator's College, St Andrews, Fife. May 30. From Professor A. P. Thirlwall

Sir. In the recent UGC evaluation of university departments, my impression is that there has oot been sufficient normalisation for size differences. Economics at Kent, for example, is regarded as "average" which is probably right judged by the absolute amount of research grant money attracted and the absolute quantity of research (let no one pretend that evaluation was based on the best five research papers), Independent research at the University of Lancaster, however, shows that Kent's economics department ranks second by the number of research papers published per member of staff over the last five years in the 20 most read economic journals in the United Kingdom. By this criterion Kent economics is outstanding. I think it would be a pity, particularly from the students' point of view, if good small departments in any disci-pline were written off. Yours sincerely, A. P. THIRLWALL, The University of Kent at Canterbury, Keynes College. The University, Canterbury, Kent.

JUNE 6 1876 Abdul Aziz became Sultan of Turkey in 1861 on the death of his brother. In 1876 the country was bankrupt and facing a crisis in foreign affairs, n situation which prompted a number of ministers to demand the deposition of the Sultan. Abdul Aziz acquiesced and quietly departed, leaving his wohen Murad to succeed him. A few days later the old Sultan committed suicide, an act which aggrovated the mental instability of Murad who reigned only three months before he was declared insane and deposed.

THE SULTAN'S DEPOSITION (From our Special Correspondent PERA, MAY 30

We are all stunned by the intelligence we received here this morning, at 10 o'clock, on landing at Karakeui Bridge from the Buyukdere and Therapis steamer. We set out from our summe quarters in a perfect deluge of rain some of us trying to make out the meaning of the reports of cannon which had been heard from Stamboul, breaking the silence of the dead hours of the night. We stopped at Bebek, where the present as well as the late Grand Vizier have their valis, or country houses, and were there joined by the Private Secretary of Mehemet Rushdi, who whispered that a great revolution had been accomplished in the night — that Sultan Abdul Aziz had been deposed, and his nephew, Murad Effendi, eldest son of Sultan Abdul Medjid, had been roclaimed. The news as it circulated on board the steamer wa variously commented upon, and became the subject of friendly bets, but on the whole obtained little credit. Presently, however, we were told to look out as we approached the imperial palaces at Dolma-batcheh and Cheragan; and there sure enough, as far as we could see through the blinding rain, we saw all the ironclads and other vessels riding at anchor pavoises as if for a great festivity. We landed, and as we looked up towards the Tower of the Bourse, we perceived that the funds, which were down at 11 last evening, had now risen to 16 32. As we crossed the bridge, on our way to Galata, we met several squuds of the Imperial mounted guard in full uniforms and with gold-laced horse-trappings, going up at a brisk gallop to Stamboul. On arriving at the British Consulate we made out that the Proclamation of Murad as Sultan had certainly been made in the night, the event being announced by firing 100 canpon; and there were discordant rumours either that Sultan Abdul Aziz was dead -- in fact, had been killed -- or that he had been imprisoned and hidden somewhere, probably on board one of bis innelads. its imagination stirred. Mrs. Thatcher's enthusiasm. for what is called "enterprise culture" builds upon the British initiative on de-regulating European business, which she launched at the Council meeting in March last year. The completion of the internal market in all its aspects by 1992, the removal of national barriers to the free movement of services as well as of trade, and the lifting of restrictive legislation from transport these are causes close to the heart of this Government, and rightly so. Such measures should in themselves help to expand Europe's labour market and case the free movement of people within it. But that target has needed to be more sharply defined before becoming a theme for the British presidency. The new campaign could do that.

A radioactive epoch From Mr Robert Logan

Sir, Archaeology can, 1 think, provide at least some reasssurance for those worried about minute increases in background radio-. activity.

With the increasing use of radiocarbon as a dating method. archaeologists have become aware that background levels of radioactivity have fluctuated quite considerably in the past, and thatradiocarbon dates need to be. calibrated to make them into true dates.

In particular, the third milleonium BC seems to have been considerably more radioactive than today, so that up to 800 years need to be added to a third millennium radiocarbon date to convert it into a true date.

Yet the third millennium BC was one of the great epochs of mankind, when the first towns

In first place, it identifies the calling for action, not words, he was perhaps indulging in wishful thinking. The Euro-pean public will be forgiven if they display a little inbred. scepticism. But the Employment Minister was sounding the right call.

> So, too, was the Chancellor the day before in describing theme number two - reform of the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP). In this case, the target is clear enough, though success in hitting it could prove elusive. Farm support prices have been cut significantly during the present decade and farmers have been. squeezed. But advances in agricultural technology are bumping up production rates to levels which remain unacceptable, and there is a general acknowledgement that a broader-based and more positive policy than the mere application of economic disincentives is needed to solve the problem.

> The encouragement of alternative crops in the burgeoning European wheatfields, and the conversion of agricultural land to other uses are among the ideas now being pushed within the Community. The unequivocal British approach to Europe's food mountains should place the Government.

Government would use its presidential tour to work for a restructuring of the system, was no less welcome than yesterday's pledge by Mr Clarke,

Doubts remain over how much Britain can actually achieve during the next-six. months. For one thing, the presidency entails a great deal. of managerial work, notably negotiations on the 1987 Community budget. Britain will have the task to fix agendas and timetables for ministerial business during the period. The opportunity to make progress towards fundamental reform has been helped by the adoption of continuous planning, under which the past-president (Holland) and the forthcoming one. (Belgium) are drawn into the process. This helps to ease the transfer of power every six. months and to avoid a wasteful hiatus. There is now, moreover, a more basic oppprtunity for this country to play a larger role in the Community, if only by virtue of the decline of the Franco-German axis which has dominated the Common Market since its inception. Europe needs the energetic application of fresh thoughts to old problems if it is-to survive growing disillusionment in some capitals - notably in Bonn. Terling, Cheimsford Essex. May 29. From the Director of Action on' Alcohol Abuse

Sir, The official reaction to the revelation of Ian Botham's use of cannabis once again illustrates the contradiction bordering on hypoc-risy which exists at the heart of the Briosb establishment with regard to recreational drugs.

The main platform of concern mounted by those who wish to "make an example" of Botham relates to the influence which such folk heroes have upoo the young. What is so puzzling, however, is why those who make such strictures are so selective.

For example, the harmful effects of alcohol on young and inexperienced people is clear for all to see. Among the under 21 age group, representation in the al-cobol offence statistics rose from 12 per cent to 21 per cent between 1964 and 1984. Over 50 percent of people killed in drink driving accidents are under 25, and breath test failures among the 16 to 19 age

Anglican morale From the Rev Arthur T. Redman Sir, Recently your Religious AffairsCorrespondent suggested that the morale of the Anglican laity is low. It is not true. As a parish priest and Warden of Readers for the diocese of Derby, I am in daily contact with lay people and find most of them in good heart especially where they are sharing in the ministry of the church.

Moreover, the part played by women in synodical government, as members of parochial church councils, as churchwardens, in lay ministry and in liturgy (women servers are commonplace) has grown and is growing. Where lay people are frustrated and morale is

Nuclear stockpile

From the Chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board . Sir, Mr Lowry (May 28) accuses me of disowning evidence given by the CEGB to the Sizewell public inquiry. This is totally untrue. This misconception appears to be based on an interview I gave in the TV Eye television programme on March 20 in which 1 said plutonium produced in the early years of operation of the first CEGB nuclear stations had gone into the defence stockpile.

It is well known that prior to 1969, the year when CEGB for the first time retained ownership of its plutonium. plutonium oroduced in CEGB stations was exchanged by the UK Government for enriched uranium from the United States under a defence agreement. It has always been clear that this plutonium must have been in a. military stockpile.

It has also been made clear through statements by the US Government, which have been reported to Parliament, that they June 2.

group went up by 23 per cent between 1983 and 1984.

And yet if he chose to do so Botham could play football next season sponsored by the drinks industry and run oo to the pitch every Saturday bedecked in advertisments for this our most potent depressive drug without committing or creating any offence whatever.

No one with a real concern for the future of this country would underestimate the potential dan-ger associated with the misuse of illicit drugs. The fact is, bowever, that for every death associated with hard drugs more than one bundred deaths can be linked with alcohol. In so roundly condemning the use of one, why is there such silence about the other? Yours faithfully.

low is when their gifts are not recognised and used, but they should, can and do make their voices heard.

No doubt these are the voices Clifford Longley has heard. Nevertheless his view is distorted. While there is no room for complacency, morale is higher in the Church of England than your correspondent suggests. One of the Church of England's delicate and important tasks is to accentuate the positive in Church life without throwing away its criocal aphave not used this plutonium in weapons, and that this continues to be their policy. There was therefore nothing new in what I said on March 20 and it was in no way inconsistent with the CEGB evidence given by Mr John Baker at the Sizewell inquiry.

Concerning the wider issue of secrecy raised by Mr Lowry, whilst the existence of the barter arrangement with the USA is public knowledge, the amount of CEGB plutonium involved is not. Although the plutonium has remained in civil use, the uranium received in exchange has been used for defence purposes in Britain. In the interests of national security therefore the Government has not been prepared for information to be disclosed on the amounts which were bartered. Yours faithfully, MARSHALL of GORING. Chairman, Central Electricity Generating Board, Sudbury House. 15 Newgate Street, ECI.

Cleaning up

From Mr Martin Hasseck Sir, My Israeli visitors laughed and laughed when I told them of Mrs Thatcher's comparison of Britaio's dirty and litter-strewn streets with those of Israel.

As one of them put it, does she not know that the red carpet is always clean? Yours faithfully, M. HASSECK 104 Holders Hill Road, NW4. June 3.

Stag hunt decision

From Councillor Dr Glyn Court Sir, Before your readers form the opinion that the members of Somerset County Council are either dedicated deer-lovers or Actaeons of the deepest dye, it is worth setting the record straight. For reasons which you have explained (report, May 24) the council, after two long and sometimes intemperate debates, resolved not to excercise its undoubted right to han the hunt from its land for the time being and this last phrase should give pause to any who claim the decision as a victory.

Between sound on one side and fury on the other, the deer stand defenceless, and the County Council's concern is to find the best means to conserve the deer and improve their strain, to safeguard the peripheral farming activities, to protect and enhance nature on the Quantocks and -herein lies the problem for which a solution must be found - to reconcile all these often conflicting in terests. Yours faithfully, G. COURT, Chairman. Quantock Hills Joiot Advisory Group, omerset County Council, Members' Room, County Hall,

Tannton,

forlorn position of the Sultan might have rendered unnecessary. I do not know whether their guil may be extenuated by pleading the precepts of the Koran which forbid opposition to the Sultan so long as he can withstand it, and, in other words, maka it less a crime to kill than to rise in arms against him. News travels fast From Mr J. F. Drysdale Sir. I am most impressed by the leap in technology which enables the report in The Times of Scotland's first World Cup tie to

I may add, however, that the intelligence of the death of Sultan Abdul Aziz is most likely to turn out correct, as Islamism does not allow the existence of two p into Khalifs, or successors of the Prophet, at the same time... That the Sultan should not be allowed to live, or at least not V 8256 allowed to reign, is what Turks, Greeks, and people of all classes and conditions, and even members 25 of the present Cabinet, have been for a long time proclaiming openly almost at every street corner. As I nation telegraphed to you yesterday, the Sultan himself had been for a long time in expectation of the fate which awaited him, and ication endeavoured to evade it by perpetually shifting his residence, by avoiding the necessity of appearing n tried before the poblic on his way to Mosque on Fridays, or by putting off his attendance from noon to a ) our later hour, and by hiding as he best 1499 ex could in the most secret apart ments of his Palace. Dame Helen Gardner, DBE, FBA, FRSL, Merton Professor of English Literature at the University of Oxford from 1966 to 1975, died on June 4. She was 78. Helen Louise Gardner was a distinguished academic critic, who, as an editor and an interpreter, made enduring contributions to literary studics. Perhaps the most important of her work as an editor lies in her two editions of John Donne, which set new standards both in point of the text and the commentary. The New Oxford Book of English Verse 1250-1950, was also a radical reassessment of the field.

As a critic she was original and humane and her dislike of metaphysical poets. Her editions of Donne's Divine Po-ems (1952), and of the Elegies fashions and authoritarian systems is well set forth in the and Songs and Sonnets of John Donne (1965), were a series of lectures collected as The Business of Criticism. As with Jeffrey Archer's book, so with the telly-series. Kane and Abel (BBC1) is simply not as bad as one might wish. But it is extravagantly over the top. Apart from information that Peter Stranss (Abel) had a hairdresser all to himself (Steve Atha), last night's credits revealed the extraordinary presence of THREE dialogue presence of THREE dialogue coaches. In transforming the accents of tea party Boston to immigrant Polish they face the most challenging task of any employees in the Western Hemisphere.

Beside the odd telephone exchange between the one-nippled Abel and Meester Weelyam Kane - a conversation that usually concludes the gutteral snarl on both sides -21 C there is precious little dialogue to coach. For 90 more minutes we were treated to the fearful symmetry of two men who first soliloquize about their child-hood fantasies of success and revenge — then live these fantasies out. Interruptions come in the shape of doe-cyed women and tangh business-men, interruptions which are easily shrogged off. Last night Abel's wife, disappeared for tan years with a shape of the shape of th ten years without him noticing.

There are many other things wrong, not least with the actors. Sam Neill looks like a cross between Jeffrey Archer and a werewolf while Peter Stranss, who should dispense with both his accent and hairdresser, has the oleaginons overtones of an Italian waiter. Their drama is appall-ingly slow, this despite a sequence which wraps up the war in 20 seconds. (Thus omitting the battlefield drama of Abel's rescue of the wounded Kane). It is appallingly sentimental. But worst of all and really unforgiveable, it is appallingly watchable - time and again hitting the annybone of feelings 0124 hoped one never had.

I was in Portugal when the Brazilian soap opera Dancing Days (Channel 4) was shown. It ground the country to a halt. At the prison which once housed the dreaded secret police, a leather chair was specially reserved for the Colonel to feast his eyes on this tale of a young girl who leaves prison after 11 years. As with most Brazilian soaps, it com-bines the tensions of one particular family (poverty,

The Trip to Bo untiful began life as a teleplay in 1953 and went on to become an enduring stage favourite on the strength of the central role, which provides an irresistible showpiece for an older actress. Lillian Gish created the part on American television and went on to play it on Broadway and extensive tours. Geraldine Page's recreation in the new screen version, directed by Peter Masterson, understandably won her this year's Best Actress Oscar.

Adapting his own play for the screen, Horton Foote - who has also written such wholly cinematic films as To Kill a Macking Bird and Tender Mercies - elected to leave it virtually untouched. The film is still plainly structured as five stage scenes demonstrating that it can pay to leave well alone, and that a good play well filmed can be more satisfying than a ybrid.

The story is simple, well construct-. ed and carried by arresting dialogue in the old, rather formal idiom of the South. Suffering all the indignities of old age, infirmity and dependence, Carrie Watts shares a two-room apartment with her adored, cowed son and his shrill, shallow, bickering wife. One day, with $3.85 and a secreted pension cheque, she takes off for the old home for which she constantly, nostalgically yearns. Her, passioo persuades the various people she meets oo her way to help her. achieve her Grail:

With equal respect for text; and players, Peter Masterson - not Paul Masterton as our interview with Geraldine Page stated yesterday directs a fine ensemble: John Heard as the defeated son who may yet find strength of his own through his mother's small triumph; Carlin Glynn as the pitiably mean Jessie

Mae and Rebecca De Mornay as a charming girl with troubles of her own who befriends Mrs Watts on her ionrney

The film is dominated, though, by Geraldine Page's tour-de-force as the shaky old lady, looking in her cotton frock tike an ill-stuffed mattress. It is easy to believe that her hymn-singing, pouting and tricks of hiding her pension cheque get on her daughterin-law's nerves, not to speak of the distaste she injects into the mere enunciation of Jessie Mae's name. But the performance also illuminates, in vivid flashes, the pleasures and disappointments of an entire lifetime past, and the dignity and innocence and values of a lost way of life. Lillian Gish is said to have been at once sharper and more spiritual. Geraldine Page's Mrs Watts is earthy, touching, never easily sentimental, and triumphant. Directed by Colin Gregg, whose memorable first feature was Remembrance, and scripted from his own novel by Bernard MacLaverty, who wrote Cal, Lamb is an interesting, well-made, but finally rather puzzling fable. It is the story of a young priest and teacher in an Irish Catholic reform school, whose wavering faith finally breaks at the sight of the sadistic treatment the boys suffer at the hands of his superior. He rescues from the school a specially persecuted 10-year-old miscreant, who is an epileptic and bed-wetter into the bargain, and together they flee to a temporary idyll of liberty in London. This strange little tragi-comedy requires us to accept a peculiar degree of naivety in the hero, as well as a hue-and-cry that seems remarkably dilatory in the light of current media fascination with child abduction. That it almost compels the neces-

Liam Neeson is an attractive, starry personality and makes credible the innocence of the father-son relacionship that grows up between the runaways, and Ian Bannen is a chilling scourge of the Lord. The film really belongs, though, to Hugh O'Conor, a three-foot child with the eyes and ears of a marmoset, a shocking vocahulary and a proud, admirable incorrigibility. Menahem Golan is the only great mogul in cinema history who not only knows how to direct films but actually goes on doing so even while ruling a movie empire on which the sun never sets. The Deita Force is the supreme demonstration that the film is the man. It is energetic, tough, impatient, never pausing in its trajectory or lingering over tiresome de-tails. If a character gets too complicated to explain, he may well disappear between one shot and the next. The American shock unit of the title arrive in Beiral from the sea with no more than their frogman suits, but in no time conjure from the air an impressive convoy of war vehicles, as well as uniforms and a motor-cylce with James Bond optional extras -including rockets which Chuck Norris lets off from behind him in symbolic gestures of disdain.

sary belief is tribute to the perfor-ances Gregg has won from his cast.

This comic book action fantasy, with all the obligatory gun-battles, explosions and car chases, is appended as the denoncment to a reasonably realistic recreation of last summer's Athens airliner hijack. The real event, of course, ended in negotiation and the release of the hostages, but that would hardly make for thrills, and the ending has been changed to give the Delta Force suitably violent work; "So long, sucker" murmurs Chuck

Norris as he blasts his gun into a Palestinian face.

The film is currently attracting Inc nim is currently attracting sizeable audiences, mainly of young males, who, though they may laugh at it, clearly find the thrills more satisfying than the jaded formulas of latter-day James Bonds. In the pro-cess, too, they get a stiff dose of crude but effective political indoctrination, for though the film may be somewhat for though the film may be somewhat wanting dramatically, it is sure where its sympathies lie.

America's best friend, the film repeatedly emphasizes, is Israel -where the film was shot in the G. and G. studio. Menahem Golan is without doubl a new force in educating the young people of the West.

He is also able to command an allstar cast: the bullet-proof Chuck Connors (who already saved America from Soviet invasion for Cannon in Invasion U.S.A.); Shelley Winters, without whom no hijack or disaster movie would be complete; Lee Marvin, way past retirement age for active service; and Hanna Schygulla, who is not the sort of air hostess one would be happy to find on board.

Israel is currently prominent on the London film scene. Goodbye New York is a comedy written, directed and acted by Amos Kollek, son of the Mayor of Jerusalem (who makes a jokey walk-oo appearance) about a dizzy New York lady who sets out for Paris but ends up in Tel Aviv by mistake. Kollek is a pleasant comic actor, but his directorial debut shows him very clamsy in his other assign-ments. The comedy is predictable, with Julie Hagerty as a spoiled American battling with Kibbutz life; and the travelogue element is awkwardly stuffed in.

Arthur Davies, who bas had splendid season with the company, takes on Leicester for the first time. His tenor is in glowing good health, moulded easily to the Donizelti style. The only surprise is that he has scarcely tackled this composer since his early days with the WNO. The Talboi of Patrick Wheatley is underpowered and undercharacterized, a weak point in a revival otherwise full of vocal distinction. Peter Rohinson and the orchestra took a little time to find their Donizetti feet, reluctani to relax and feel the true rhythms. They were best in the choral ensembles, notably

Behind Heaven Royal Exchange, Manchester

The influence on fringe theatre of the television comedy series The Young Ones has given rise to a minor genre of its own. Take a handful of averagely penurious young characters, plant them in a shabby flat where the decor can take a hit of punishment, and let them transcend their boredom through jokey fantasy.

Jonathan Moore's new play, a long-winded and rather messy elaboration of the genre, needs a smaller stage than the Royal Exchange on which to set the basement flat of the action; and, as though io compensation, the author has bulked out his script with grand ideas which consort uneasily with the flipoess of much of his dialogue.

The plot is nouveau-Orton: a pair of dope-smoking Social Security claimants on the

A marderous game of see-saw was being played inside the Goldén Temple of Amrit-sar yesterday for control of the holiest shrine of the Sikh religion.

Mr Mark Thatcher, the Prime Mioister's son, was yesterday moving his furni-ture from the Dallas flat he left a month ago after fellow residents claimed his presence there percent them a computer mand on Wednesday, and went on the rampage through-out the rooms and resthouses of the complex, looking for remains of the police presence which had been withdraws the there posed them 3 security day before.

In the wake of the US raid on Libya in April, the manage-ment of the Dallas spartment block was asked to install extra security and surveillance cameras in case terrorist threats were made against him. It refused to do so and instead asked him to leave on the grounds that other residents were worried by his presence.

The management action was vigourously criticized, especially by Mr John Power, a former Texas senator, who called it discourteous and cowardly. Mr Thatcher was then permitted to stay until his lease ran out at the end of May. However, he moved to his new address a month ago to end the cootroversy. The expense of his protec-tioo is borne by the US Bureau of Diplomatic Security, which has standing authorization to protect family members of foreign heads of state or governments.

The differences unresolved, it is clear from the 40-page document, were between those like the Bisbop of Durham who take the "empty tomb" and the Virginal Conception to be references to spiritual truths, namely the Incarnation and the Resurrection, and those who believe that they describe what actually happened. The Archbishop of Canter-bury, Dr Robert Runcie, at a press conference said: "We have chosen a form of words which leaves no doubt about the corporate and official com-mitment of our church to the mitment of our church to the faith of the church universal, faith of the church universal, yet does not exclude those bishops – doctrinal explorers we might call then – who agree with their collesignes over the theological meaning of the empty tomb and the Virginal Conception but can-not accept them as proven historical fact."

Asked whether their state ment meant that the Church of England could still consecrate bishops who held this latter view he said it depended how they chose to express them-selves. This was as near as he has yet come to questioning the appointment of the Bishop of Durham, for in other contexts he has strongly criticized bishops who introduced new ideas insensitively.

Executive Editor Kenneth Fleet Channon takes soft option on mergers

Win SD

They have, in turn, found it singularly first time the non-banking activities hard to digest. The latest in her line of Secretaries of State for Trade and Industry, Mr Paul Channon, is not prepared to risk its impact on his stomach lining before it has been through that food processor known as a government review. Mr Channon's statement yesterday, announcing the setting np of this review, was bland to the point of detachment. Both "law and policy" relating to mergers and restrictive trade practices are to come under review. The reasons? Mergers policy has "attracted attention" recently, while restrictive trade practices legislation has been in operation for 30 years, and "has been criticized on a number of grounds".

Mr Channon wants wide public debate, and expert evidence. Fine. But those providing input to this review are entitled to expect from the responsible cabinet minister something more in the way of a statement of principle, on which to hang their objections or support. It is not, for example, clear whether Mr Channon believes that the policy issues are confined to competition pure and simple, or should involve wider economic considerations. With only two years to go, at most, until the end of this Parliament, the Government cannot afford to waste time.

If the review is to take place in a policy vacuum, its conclusions will then have to be offered up for consultation before they can even seek a place in the legislation queue. Mr Channon has asked for initial views by the end of July; it would be fair to ask for an initial ministerial response to these views within a similarly brief period. After all, most of those interested. parties - up to and including the Director-General of Fair Trading have already made their opinions known, sometimes with quite pungent clarity. Or is Mr Channon hoping that merger fever will abate in a year or so, and with it the need to take government action?

Rewards of diversity

Hill Samuel has a better record than most when-it comes to comparing. profit growth among merchant banks over the last four or five years. Since, 1982 after tax profits have moved Hill Samuel is not as big as many of its forward in regular jumps from £16 rivals. The disclosed net worth of the million to the £40.6 million prelimi- group dropped to £179 million after nary result announced yesterday for climinating £32 million of goodwill the year to March 31 1986. Compared and £44 million from acquisitions. with 1985 group profits were up by 27 per cent. For the last five years the group has followed a policy of building up other operation due to come into service areas of business, including insurance after October. It will receive backing hroking, employee benefits, shipping of £10 million, well below what many services and investment management competitors are putting up for their to act as a second string to traditional - own-gilt operations and exactly half merchant banking activities. Last year it spent £50 million on non-banking National, announced last week that it acquisitions, most notably on operations in the United States to develop business.

Competition policy should be the the international flavour of the group. natural diet of Thatcher ministers. Yesterday's results show that for the contributed over 40 per cent to group operating profits. This helped to produce a healthy 22 per cent return on capital and reserves. That is an impressive contribution for what is still essentially a merchant banking group, although it is worth observing that Hill Samuel chooses to seperate out some "non-banking" activities, such as investment management, when many of its competitions simply include them in the total result.

A little less impressive than the previous year was the merchant banking result. Here, profits rose by £3.5 million to £26.5 million compared with an increase of well over £4 million in the previous year. At least part of the reason is that the glittering prizes in corporate finance, which have proved so profitable for some banks recently, seem to have eluded Hill Samuel this time. Elders's hid for Allied Lyons was referred, so far depriving Hill Samuel of millions of pounds in fee income as advisers to Elders. In addition, the British Air-ways flotation in which Hill Samuel will eventually play a big part has been delayed time and again.

There is inevitably an element of pure bad luck in this, though attention within the group may also have been distracted by preparations for big bang in which Hill Samuel – under the dynamic leadership of Christopher Castleman, its chief executive - is now deeply involved. Hill Samuel falls between houses such as Lazards and Barings who have decided to stay out of the new game in all its marketmaking manifestations, and the big financial roadshows like Mercury International, BZW and Kleinwort Benson. Though not as big as the big boys, Hill Samuel wants to do all the same things.

The bank disclosed yesterday that it was spending some £60 million in big bang preparations. This includes such diverse items as the £20 million spent on buying Wood Mackenzie, the stockbroker, and the cost of installing dealing positions and coffee machines for its market-making team. By the standards of its bigger rivals, £60 million is not a vast amount. But then,

We're the people responsible for turning the humble pear into Babycham. A sparkling success by any standards. But we were far from finished with the pear, not while there was still more profit to be squeezed from him.

In 1980 we launched a still perry called Country Manor.

It has proved so popular that it already sells 10 million bottles a year.

Sales have grown by an average of 72% a year for the last four years.

Over Christmas alone they were up 82%. Last year Country Manor and Babycham helped Allied-Lyons achieve a record pre-tax profit growth of 23% to £269.5 million.

Country Manor is one of the biggest single success stories the off-trade business has witnessed throughout the 1980's.

For us, it seems, allied-Lyons success comes in pears.

Unseasonal weather is still plaguing retailers, but May looked much brighter. The long-awaited Conranization of British Home Stores has still to be revealed. The combined Habitat/BHS group has been quiet about its intentions, but s now promising a mini-bang in the autumn, probably contwo years. centrating on jazzing up and marketing BHS

BHS has been revamping its product lines in many areas, but increased quality in men's suits, homeware and other lines has kept ahead of consumer perceptions. The introduction of one of Sir Terence Conrao's men, Mr John Stephens, who took charge of Mothercare's merchandise after that merged with Habitat, to head a product team at BHS indicates perceptions may soon be changing. There is still work to be done on the product front the news that BHS, like Woolworth, is throwing in the towel on food is an indication of such work. Abandoning food, which has been loss-making since the late 1970s, will free op to 7 per cent extra space in BHS stores for higher margin goods. The £18 million cost of abandoning food was tak-en below the line, also like Woolies. Elsewhere in the group,

Richard Shops' extensive clo-sure and refit programme led to taxable losses of £4.6 million compared with £2.4 million. This year, however, should see strong benefit from the changes. The City is expecting taxable profits this year from Storehouse of around £125 million, which gives a pro-spective p/e ratio of 13%.

At home a professional property valuation has re-duced the book value of the portfolio by £2.1 million to £50.2 million. # Barriers to trade and investment in Europe must be removed

The European Community plays an important part in the business strategy of this company. Group profits earned within Europe, including the UK, have risen to £390m in the last 10 years. There are strong opportunities for business expansion and profit in Europe but we could do even better if the trading environment was less restrictive.

It is vital, in the interests of everybody who lives and earns his living in this part of the world, that we tear down the antiquated barriers to trade and investment inside the European Community and establish the single internal market which was always part of the long-term goal.

One internal market in Europe will mean that we can sell our goods and services as easily to France or Portugal as we can to Manchester or Edinburgh. It will remove delays at frontier posts and reduce the £7 billion of unnecessary administrative costs incurred by European businesses each year.

One market in Europe means that businesses can grow to a sufficient size to compete with international competitors, and it will unleash the tremendous skills, innovation and capital that can make our businesses world leaders. In financial services, an area of particular interest to this Group, there are signs that some #### of the barriers preventing trade between member states will be reduced. Later this year the European Court will make its judgement about restrictions on insurance. This could lead the way to a much freer market, with opportunities for new business and new jobs.

Throughout Europe there is a greater awareness of the need for competitive and profitable business and the kind of environment which will encourage that. Lord Cockfield, Vice-President of the European Commission, has produced a timetable for the completion of the internal market. Prime Ministers of Europe have agreed amendments to the Treaty of Rome which commit them to complete the internal market by 1992 and improve decision making.

Of course, a major endeavour such as this is bound to encounter difficulties, but the stakes are so high that we must find a way round them. At the moment the will is there, but it needs to be translated into action.

If Europe is to face up to her competitive challenges and successfully tackle the blight of unemployment then Governments, businesses and citizens must learn to co-operate and work together for the future. For it is only by real and practical co-operation that Europe can remain a major economic and political force in the world today.

Erie Legrix on Triptych by B short head. Petoski, last year's King George VI and Queen Elizabeth Diamond Stakes wittner finished three lengths away in third place with Shardari, the heavily backed even-money favourite, a close fourth.

Saint Estephe was the first French-trained horse to capture this famous group one race since Exceller in 1977 and the first Gallic invader to succeed in England since Palace Musie won the Champion Stakes in October, 1984. There was a stewards inquiry afterwards as the winner had hung to the left in the closing stages but the placings were allowed to stand.

Io contrast to the Derby, the Coronation Cup was run at a strong even pace throughout and the wincer's time of 2 mioutes 34.87 seconds was 21/2 seconds faster than that re-corded by Shahrastani the day before.

Boldden, Petoski's pacemaker, dictated the early gal-lop, followed by the Guy Harwood-trained pair, St Hilarion and Phardante, and Shardari. Willie Carson soon 250 winners over jumps as an had Petoski racing oo the amateur, including the Grand

Considering that it was his first race for 11 months, Petoski ran a thoroughly satisfactory trial for his second attempt oo the King George. "He must have been rusty," Shelagh Hern, the trainer's wife, said. "Under the circumstances, he put up a good performance

Shardari, on the other hand, who had been the medium of a spectacular gamble, was a disappointing favourite. "The colt just didn't appear to handle to track," Swinburn said afterwards.

Aodre Fahre, Saiot Estephe's trainer, has charge of 200 horses at Chantilly. "I think I've got the largest string in France apart from Francois Boutin," he said. "I started training in 1978 and have so far won two classics, the Poule d'Essai des Poulains with Siberian Express and last year's Prix de Diane with

"He's taken the race well," Guy Harwood said. "But un-35,000 guineas as a foal will have his next race in the Grand Prix de Saint-Cloud on fortunately Allez Milord had pulled a muscle in a tendon."

Michael Stoute reported that Shahrastani was in fine shape after his Derby win and that the cut he had sustained oo his leg was eotirely superfi-cial. "Either the Irish Derby or the Eclipse Stakes will be his next target," the trainer added. The Eclipse also remains the objective of Dancing Dunlop.

The most impressive win-Brave, the fast finishing ruoner of the afternoon was First Division, who stormed home a gamble from 12-1 to 7-1.

TODAY'S PROSPECTS Travnicek ' Pennine Walk can take Diomed Stakes in his stride By Mandarin (Michael Phillips)

PENNINE WALK, who wor the last sharp bend as well as the two who best him. However, the as a two-year-old, can make a experience should have done triumphant return to the difficult industring Surrey track today him right for tiday's test.

as a two-year-old, can make a triumphant return to the difficult undukting Surrey track today by taking the Diomed Stakes. My selection looked in tremendous form at Kempton at the beginning of last month when, on his seasonal debut, he won the Jublice Handican carry-ine 9st 11th. him right for inday's test. IMPERIAL JADE, who so rearly beat Chamime here on Wednesday, makes a quick re-turn to the Epson downs for the Tokyo Trophy, ran over a furlong further. The way that she finished on Derby day suggests that this slightly longer distance will suit her. A line through Bollin Emily, who fin-ished third, gives her the edge over Laurie Lorman, who just managed to touch off Bollin Emily at Goodwood hast month. At Catterick, I envisage Wil-won the Juhilee Handicap carry-ing 9st 11th. Last season Pennine Walk showed that he was capable of whaning a group race when he lifthed the Jersey Stakes at Royal Asost. Later in the summer he excelled again by giving Lucky Ring 13th and a 2%-length beating in the Addison Tools Handicap at Newmarket. While it is fair to say that

Emily at Goodwood last month. At Catterick, I envisage Wil-lie Ryan, who rode Faraway Dancer to such good effect in his first Derby, ianding a double on RAISINHELL (3.15) and LOCH SEAFORTH (4.15). When Raisinhell won at Goodwood, she beat Maleila who is now my selection for the second division of the Merrybent Stakes. Handicap at Newmarket. While it is fair to say that Lucky Ring went from strength to strength subsequently, win-ning at Goodwood and York before landing the Kiveton Park Stakes at Doncaster, I still feel that Pennine Walk will be capable of giving hint 3lb this afternoon, especially as Lucky Ring failed to cat a dash in the Lockinge Stakes on his reappearance. Lock Seaforth is preferred to Lock Scaforth is preferred to Just David in the Scotch Corner Stakes but Alec Stewart and Michael Roberts, the trainer and jockey associated with Just David, should gain compensa-tion at Haydock's evening meet-ing where MTOTO is napped to win the Chipmobile Maiden Stakes. On a line through Soprano, who finished third to Lucky Ring at Doncaster and second to Ever Genial in the Hungerford, Ever Genial in the Hungerford Stakes at Newbary, it is possible to argue that there should not be much between Lucky Ring and Ever Genial now. Stakes.

Ever Genni now. Nino Bibbia is a new favourite of mine but this represents a very considerable step up in class after winning his maiden at Newmarket and a maidens-at-closing at Sandown. This Busted colt, who so nearly won on his seasonal debut at Salisbury, has been going sufficiently well at home since then that his able young trainer is thinking is terms of a crack at the King Edward VII Stakes at Royal Ascot later this month. Today's race should be easy

Stately Form, a stable companion of Pennine Walk and also in the same ownership, is expected to make a bold show in the Northern Dancer Handicap

In 1982 Matt McCormack ran Horage in the John Lawlor Stakes as part of his preparation following that good run at Chester where he was beaten for what targed out to be a successful tilt at the Coventry only a neck by Pagan Sun.

In this instance, though, I prefer POSITIVE, who had a recent race at Haydock Park sewn op even before his weight-cloth slipped out from under his Stakes at Royal Ascot. Now he is hoping, with some justifica-tion, that QUEL ESPRIT will non, mar QUEL ESPRIT with follow in Horage's footsteps. Finally, VAGUE SHOT is taken to win the Burtonwood Brewery Handicap from the recent Poutefract winner, High-est Praise. Con Horgan's anch-improved colt did followers of this column a good turn at Goodwood last time out and I made on my mind there and them ing in inevitable disqualification. The form of the Manx Derby will be put to the test in the Sun Life of Canada Handicap when FARAG runs with 8st 11b on his FARAC runs with est the out are back. At Castletown, Peter Walwyn's colt would probably have won instead of finishing a close third if he had come round made op my mind there and then to stay loyal to him.

Repeated efforts were made by the Raiegh and Pengeot professional terms to win the semh stage of the Milk Rank yesterday, but all their efforts came in naught and another bunch-finish resulted in a narrow victory for Jiri Travnicek, of Czechosiovakia. The race leader, Joey McLoughlin of ANC-Halfords, was called into action only twice by his main challenger, Petr was called into acnon only twice by his main challenger, Petr Ugrumov. The Soviet rider first attacked, climbing away from Salisbory with his team col-league. Toomas Kirsiput. They ware tagged by the second-placed rider, Malcolm Elbort, and rune British arrestance with and two British amateurs, with McLoughlin led the chase.

McLoughlin icd the chase. Twenty miles later, Ugrumov broke clear on a steep drop into Hurstbourne. Tarrant, halfway through the rolling 89-mile route from Bournemouth to Swindon. He was hoping to bridge a 90-second gap to Mark Bell, of Raleigh, and Jan Koba, of Peugeot, who had moved forward after the earlier action, Asein, the ANC-Halfords team Again, the ANC-Halfords team were quick to react.

Bell and Koba were even-mally caught on a headwind section along the Bath Road, 19 miles from Swindon. Their miles from Swindon. Their team mates continued the at-tack. First Seam Yates, of Paugeot, and Jeff Williama, of Raleigh, went clear with three others. Then Paul Watson pulled away and was joined by his team mate, Paul Sherwen, and Philippe Casado, of Pengeot, and three others. It was Travnicek who burst through by maintain his record of winning a state in each of his three Milk

FOOTBALL Scots on the receiving end as tactical thuggery takes the field From David Miller, Mexico Cirv

The World Cup is oot of guay had played a match and only a third of the way which overall was far worse, hand only a third of the way through the first round. De-spite the usual exhortations of promises of firm action matches are being corrupted by tactical thuggery, if any-thing on a worse scale than in 1982. the referees' committee and

In a new year statement in the F.A News, after the draw for the final competition, Joao Havelange, the president, requested members of the Press to pillory those players and teams who were guilty of unfair play. Yet how can we pillory individuals when the referees fail to punish them?

Denmark's thrilling victory over Scotland on Wednesday afternoon in Neza, by far the most outstanding match of the competition so far, was deval-ued by the gross, deliberate foul by their midfield player, Klauss Berggreen, on Charlie Nicholas six minutes from the end. Nicholas has torn ankle ligaments and will miss Scotland's remaining first-round matches

Berggreen, who has been three seasons with Pisa and is on his way to Roma, should have been sent off by Lajos Nemeth, of Hungary, but there was no more than a free kick, taken by Souness, from which McAvennie, an earlier substitute for Sturrock, hooked overhead past a post in a close attempt to equalize.

If Berggreen was not sent off then he should be suspended for what he said afterwards. "It was a professional foul," he admitted. "I had to do it and if I had not I would have been an nmateur. I apologize to Nicholas," Such cynicism is scandalous. It is totally wrong that Berggreen should be available to play in Denmark's second match against Uruguay.

WORLD CUP TV

Every World Cup brings as new tactical advances (even if Ally MacLeest thought tactics were a kind of peppermint, as a Scottish player once suggest-ed). World Cups have brought as wingless wonders, the Bra-zilian free kick, total football. This one has already brought as a new approach to the game. Let us call it los bastardos football - football born on the wrong side of the blanket

In so far as it is based around cheating. Ios bastardos football is not new. The novelty is in organization and method. The logic is that hapbazard, impolsive cheating is no good to anyone. But once you have your cheating organized on a proper footing, you are beginning to get some-where. Los hastardos football brings the concept of team spirit to cheating. It brings the coach in as well.

The theory is that if you cheat enough you can't possi-bly lose. Therefore, you have a 50-50 chance of winning. You put theory into practice by waiting until an opponent attempts to use football skills to go past you. You then kick him extremely hard, every single time. He will never get past soon he will stop even irying. If you kick enough people often enough to do your hit for the team, every now and then you will be anlucky and get punished. Don't worry: your side have lost no more than a single kick at the ball while your opponents have lost a good proportion of the nerve and effectiveness of the players.

To get punished in front of goal is slightly more serious but by no means calamitons. It your five colleagues begin a united shuffle forwards. You
